- Rooted in Gender
“Systems of power are the beliefs, practices, and cultural norms on which individual lives and institutions are built. They are rooted in social constructions of race and gender and embedded in history (colonization, slavery, migration, immigration, genocide) as well as present-day policies and practice. These systems of power reinforce white supremacy, patriarchy, and heteronormativity as defining power structures in the United States. Systems of power are oppressive and define relationships between marginalized communities and the dominant culture; they also shape social norms and experiences within marginalized communities. Systems of power feed the structural barriers that are the root causes of inequity experienced by young women of color.”

• Are we all standing on the same soil?
• What are the leaves and roots in policy?
• How do our policy decisions affect the whole tree?

HEALTH OUTCOMES

ROOT CAUSES
Root causes can range from food systems to neighborhood development. Differences in root causes include whether or not we have grocery stores in our neighborhoods or the ability to get a housing loan. Root causes lead to health outcomes and have to be addressed to make a difference in individual health. You will see 11 examples of root causes in our full report.

SYSTEMS OF POWER
Deep in the soil, you will find systems of power—like racism and sexism—which shape how people experience root causes of health equity like housing or employment. These systems of power are embedded in history and our present day policies and practices.
